1850; 1889 alterations

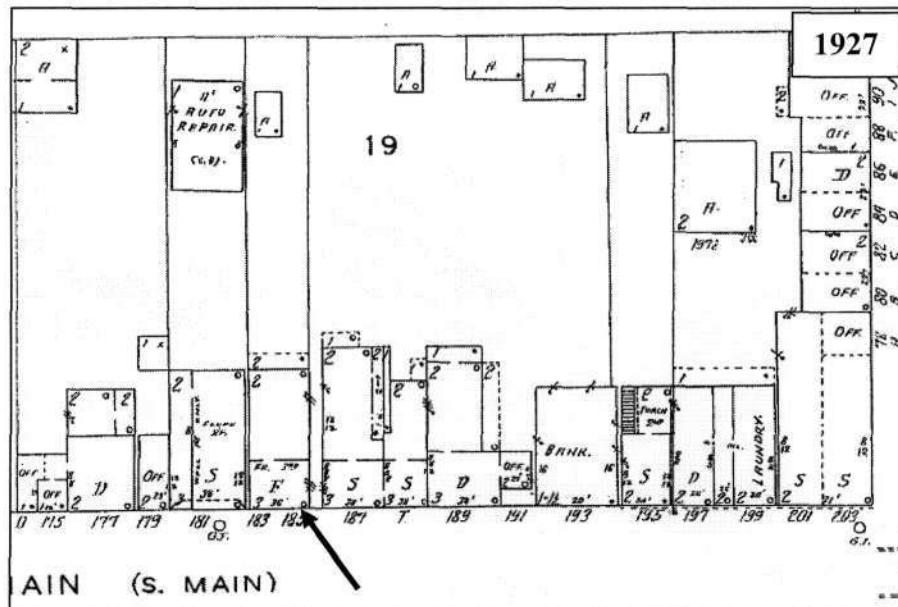

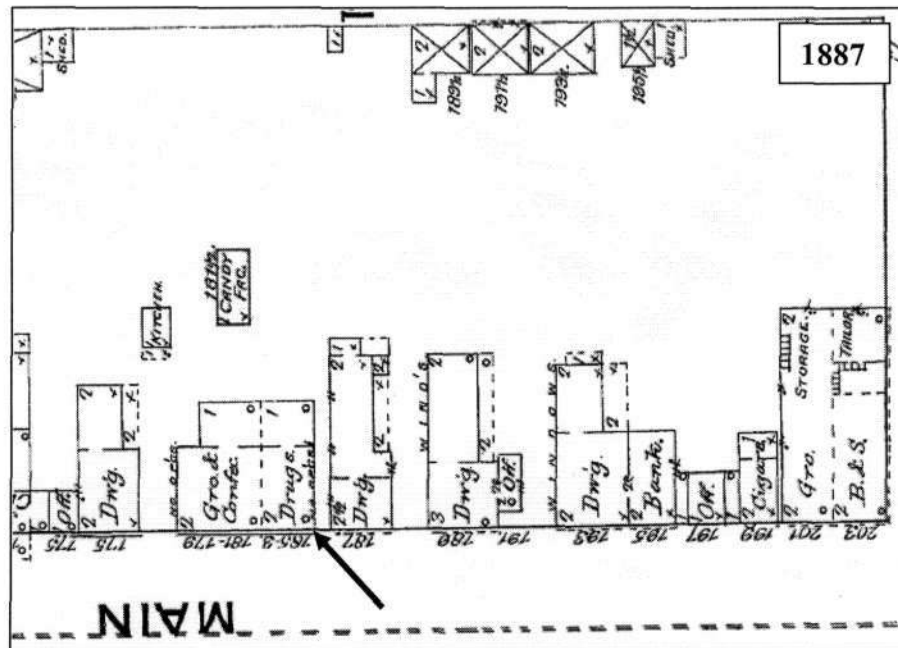

Three stories high and two irregular bays wide, this building faces south onto East Main Street. The eastern bay, wider than the west, contains a shopfront on the first floor, and groups of three windows on either of the two floors above. The western bay contains groups of two such windows on the second and third floors, and two narrow doors with three-light transoms on the first floor. The bracketed cornice, broken in two by the pilaster separating the two bays, has a dentil molding at the bottom, and fishscale shingles above.

Number 183 East Main Street was originally a part of Carroll Hall, its neighbor at 181. The white structure was remodeled in the late 19th century. The choice of decoration used by this section's remodeler is interesting, in that it is almost an exact small-scale replica of that of the Wantz building further down the street.
